All healthcare professionals have access to and undertake continuing professional development to deliver safe and effective healthcare.

Every healthcare professional has access to interprofessional education that enhances the delivery of practice in the care of infants and their families.

All parents are provided with a training programme to facilitate their development as confident caregivers.

All doctors providing care to infants and their families receive training using a competency based curriculum and assessment framework.

Every healthcare professional caring for infants and their families delivers care based on the best available evidence, integrated with clinical expertise, available resources and the wishes of the family.

Interprofessional education (IPE) and interprofessional practice (IPP)

Evidence-based practice

A common neonatal medical training curriculum

All nurses providing care to infants and their families have access to and undergo education and training using a competency based curriculum and assessment framework.

A common neonatal nurse training curriculum

The role of simulation in education and training in neonatal care

All healthcare professionals develop and maintain competencies to provide safe and effective care through regular simulation-based learning.

Education programme supporting parents and families

The European Foundation for the care of newborn infants

Education & training

Evidence-based practice

Evidence-based practice